

*Retold by Krishna Shastri
Illustrated by Bujjai*

EMESCO

The Frog, the Bee and the Elephant

In a forest, by a pond, there lived a large group of frogs. One day, the frogs heard a terrible noise and were frightened. It sounded as though a huge animal was rushing towards them!

Sure enough, within seconds, a rogue elephant charged out of a clump of trees. It ran straight towards the frogs. Before they knew it, the elephant had trampled on and killed many of the frogs.

The frogs that escaped decided that they had to punish the elephant somehow.

One frog said, "I have an idea. Let me ask my friend, the bee, to help us."

The others said, "How can a bee help us? It is such a small creature!"

"Wait and see," the first frog replied.

The frog went to see the bee and told him what had happened. The bee agreed to help at once. The two friends came up with a plan.

The next day, they went looking for the elephant. As soon as the bee saw him, he stung the elephant in his eyes and made him blind.

Soon, the elephant felt thirsty and got up to look for water. The frog had been waiting for this, and began to croak loudly. The elephant thought he was near water. He stumbled towards the sound.

But there was no water there at all, only a huge pit! The elephant walked towards the pit, and fell straight in. And that was the end of the rogue elephant.

